

Identity & Access Management

By Tieto Security Services

The problem

Imagine one of your business partners telling you that Mr. Stephen Stevenson is a trusted employee that is authorized to do business with you. How much can you trust him? Do you give him authority rights to check inventory lists? To access accounting storage?

Distributing authorization and access is a tremendous challenge for all companies today. At the end of the day, businesses provide value to customers, and your job is to make sure that your employees can access the information to do this. At the same time, you must protect the company from intrusion that might lead to losing reputation of customers. Being able to provide access and rights seamlessly and instantly is therefore essential in generating business value in a secure way.

However, the challenge of authorization and access is likely to become even more difficult in the future. Today, failing in this area is related primarily to potential security risks. Tomorrow, the increasingly thorough regulatory demands will require companies to improve their approach. The first step in this direction is GDPR, the General Data Protection Regulation, a law adopted by EU that will be put in practice by 2018. GDPR will require all companies that handle personal data of EU citizens to follow its rules. Failing to meet the requirements of GDPR will lead to legal consequences. This new regulatory situation makes provisioning of access and rights essential for all companies.
